Associated degree course/semester taken	BA Culture of Antiquity, L3, Latin Philology, BA Historical and Cultural Studies/Major subject, 1 st or 3 rd Sem. (dependent on knowledge)
Module coordinator	Cf. German version
Prerequisites	Qualification in Latin or language requirement exam “Latin 2”. Module coordinator decides on equivalency of language skills.
Learning outcomes	The module provides basic knowledge of the Latin language as a system. The students gain an active speech faculty and theoretical and practical experience of the linguistic form of a text. This includes systematic knowledge of the most important phonetic, morphological, syntactic and lexical phenomena of the Latin language, mastery of meta-linguistic descriptive tools and an ability to apply the acquired methods and knowledge to concrete text examples.
Module content	The grammar course provides basic knowledge of the phonetics and morphology, as well as the syntax of the Latin language. The reading course provides an introduction to simple texts. Basic grammar knowledge is practiced using examples and theoretical knowledge of morphology and syntax gained through the grammar course is applied. Methods for improving reading comprehension and speed are improved through a routine of language acquisition and a greater range of texts. Basic texts are the prose of Caesar and Cicero.

Prerequisites	A pass in Latin Language I
Learning outcomes	Through the translation tutorial, the students learn how to interpret texts confidently which guarantees reflective and precise meta-linguistic handling of Latin texts. The focus is also on understanding a text within the context of their overall argumentative concept. The basic principle for working with text grammar is knowledge of more complex forms of period literature and text coherence, as well as an awareness of the influence of rhetorical devices on style.
Module content	Based on the systematic usage of complex, knowledge-rich grammar chapters, alongside occasional translations into Latin which leads to an increased mastery of grammar and phraseology for translation into German. Extensive text passages are analysed which enables the students to gain insight into comprehensive stylistic techniques – e.g. rhythm and pace, syntactic arcs of suspense, period construction and ring composition.

Associated degree course/semester taken	BA Culture of Antiquity, L3 Greek Philology, L3, Latin Philology, BA Historical and Cultural Studies/Major subject/Minor subject/3 rd -6 th sem.
Module coordinator	Cf. German version
Prerequisites	A pass in core modules 04-lat.Phil.-BA- 01 and 04-lat.Phil.-BA- 02
Learning outcomes	The rhetoric of the Ancient World forms a system of rules which has not only been constantly extended and improved upon since its first systematisation in the 5 th century B.C. (Sophism) but has also had an enormous influence on all forms of public speech and literary production. It was connected very early on with extensive ethical and educational concepts. Due to the importance of rhetoric in education across antiquity, it has extraordinary culture founding and organizing power: linguistic production in antiquity cannot be understood without a deeper insight into this system and its history. In addition to this poetry is an attempt to theorize on literary production and to define the criteria for evaluating literary quality. General knowledge of the most important aspects of both disciplines is indispensable for a classical scholar for hermeneutical reasons as this knowledge enables him not only to relativize his own analytical criteria but also to conduct a historically accurate examination of his objects of study.
Module content	In this module students learn about the forms of the ancient poetry and rhetoric. The students learn how the work of poets and orators, their procedures, tasks and reception by audiences and readers was conceived in antiquity using textual examples. The selection of texts includes ancient theoretical texts and examples of speeches, as well as literary texts from which meta-poetic design principles can be deduced. In addition, insights into communicative conditions and the distribution of literature and its diachronic development in antiquity can be conveyed. This module also investigates how concepts were received and developed after antiquity from the Renaissance to the modern era.
Form(s) of instruction	Lecture (2 contact hours), seminar (2 contact hours), tutorial (2 contact hours) In addition to instruction, students practice and elaborate on the subject through homework and short presentations as well as through autonomous reading of a range of primary texts and/or a canon of selected research literature.

Associated degree course/semester taken	BA Culture of the Antiquity, L3, Greek Philology, L3, Latin Philology, BA Historical and Cultural Studies/Major subject/Minor subject/3 rd -6 th sem.
Module coordinator	Cf. German version
Prerequisites	A pass in core modules 04-gr.Phil.-BA- 01 and 04-gr.Phil.-BA- 02
Learning outcomes	The students understand important traditional classification concepts. The term "example" means that, in addition to learning how to work with textual and cultural forms of classification, students learn specifically to reflect on their importance, origin and heuristic application, as well as to understand their historical and ideological conditions. Classification terms are willingly and frequently used not only in literary discourse but also in cultural discourse where their largely problematic and highly complex potential meanings which result from a long and often polemic historical tradition, are often not reflected on sufficiently. Thus, there is a danger, even in a BA course that is restricted in both length and content, that these defining arguments are increasingly simplified into easily accessible stereotypes which get in the way of a deeper understanding of the phenomena. It is therefore important that students at least experience examples of the historical and ideological conditions and socio-historic dimensions of analytical criteria. Hence the module raises issues that are of interest to all students of antiquity, whatever their core subject area.
Module content	Examples of such forms are for instance "genres" (epic, tragedy, comedy, a lyric genre, satire), philosophical doctrine (Stoicism, Epicureanism, etc.), an era (Archaic Era, the Second Sophistic Era, Augustan era) or comprehensive concepts such as "the Comic", "the Utopia", "Pagan vs. Christian culture", "Myth", "the Classical".
