The September 2014 Scottish Independence Referendum and the 2016 UK EU Referendum are re-defining Scotland's place in the UK and its place in the EU. This lecture will examine what impact the EU Referendum on 23rd June will have on the UK's future within Europe and on Scotland's position in both unions.

Dr Neil McGarvey is Associate Dean of the Humanities & Social Sciences Faculty at the University of Strathclyde, Glasgow. He has published widely in the field of local politics, Scottish politics and intergovernmental relations. He is the co-author of the leading textbook Scottish Politics (2013).

This lecture is part of the summer 2016 series
“The Future of the UK: Between Internal and External Divisions”.

Everyone is welcome to attend.
