Content

Many young academics at the beginning of their teaching carrier need to cope with a challenge how to make their lectures comprehensible even for demotivated and uninterested students.

The situation could be complicated with a big amount of theoretical material and its unclear relation to practical experiences. Students may start lose their interest and lectures become less enjoyable not only for them, but also for teachers.

During my studies I have received a lot of information and seen many approaches how to captivate listeners keeping their constant attention. I also attended workshops dedicated not only for teaching skills but also for the presenting image.

After I participated in GGS Teaching Assistantship Program, I decided to design my own approach.

I will present my models of lecture structuring, based on the experience not only from the academic background but also from artistic and musical performances.

During the workshop students will learn how to give a pre-lecture introduction and how to organize the lecture in a most approachable way. The workshop will also include training exercises how to deal with different types of students, how to give a critical feedbacks and how to present your academic and non-academic personality for the students.
